

A MUSEUM FOR EVERYONE

Guided tour to discover the museum's tactile stations

The museum preserves the remains of an Etruscan palace from the 7th and 6th centuries BC. A museum that chronicles the life daily life of an aristocratic family Etruscan family through numerous topics: the banqueting, crafts, the subsistence activities, art and architecture , religion and death.

The tactile stations that reproduce some of the most important exhibits offer the possibility of reading facilitated and facilitate the visit for everyone.

The museum is housed on the three floors of the ancient bishop's palace within the small village of Murlo. The facility is equipped with servoscale.

Parking is located outside the walls but it is possible to enter with the car inside the village in case of need.

The Museum of Murlo has initiated a project of a museum accessible, proposing solutions of layout and communication that - while focusing on welcoming of people with motor, sensory and cognitive difficulties, temporary or permanent - are not thought of as dedicated, but are usable by all.

The layout

Along the route are tactile panels with drawing in relief for an understanding of the work, with captions in augmented characters, in relief and in braille to allow an independent visit for all.

QRcodes illustrate the exploration and understanding of the exhibits, both in Italian and English, with subtitling and translation in LIS.

The permanent exhibit design extends to all and offers activities for children: there is a multisensory station created by the Laboratory Forbidden Not to Touch.
